

Audio file

Social\_OrangeBowl.Voiceover \(3\).mp4

Transcript

Travel with me from Portland to Miami for the Ducks Fan Travel experience. I had a super early departure with a connecting flight in Seattle, but honestly, there's something about the PDX airport that just brings me peace. Pretty cool knowing that UO alumni helped with recent renovations. Also, check out this Columbia sportswear display. As an alumni member, you can get access to the employee store, which is super clutch for outdoor gear. PDX airport is just full of local art too, so the walk to your gate ends up feeling like a mini gallery tour. But I finally hopped on my flight, and during the quick Seattle connection, I got this unreal view of Mount Rainier. Check it out. But you know you're not in the Pacific Northwest anymore when the sun is out past 5 p.m. in December. Wild.

I finally made it, and the team greeted me right in the lobby. The information, schedule, and QR code were super helpful, and I even received an Orange Bowl guide that includes all the rosters and Orange Bowl info, a clear bag perfect for football games, and a set of packing cubes. And let's not forget the fan travel badge with a cool lanyard. Go Ducks!